The novel begins with Naima as a young girl, growing up in a small town in the Midwest. She is a bright and curious child, but she is also deeply insecure. Her father is a distant figure, and her mother is emotionally unavailable. As a result, Naima develops a deep sense of loneliness and longing.

When Naima is in her early twenties, she meets a man named David. David is everything that Naima has ever wanted in a partner. He is kind, compassionate, and loving. Naima falls head over heels in love with him, and they soon get married. However, their marriage is not without its challenges. David has a dark past that he is struggling to overcome, and Naima finds it difficult to trust him at times.

and laughter. However, their happiness is short-lived. David is diagnosed with cancer, and he dies a few years later. Naima is devastated by her loss, and she struggles to come to terms with her grief.
