The Genesis of the George Cross

Established in 1940 by King George VI, the George Cross was instituted as the civilian counterpart to the Victoria Cross, Britain's highest military award. It recognizes exceptional acts of bravery, often in situations where there is no immediate threat to life.

The George Cross is awarded to both civilians and members of the armed forces who perform acts of outstanding heroism not in the face of the enemy. Its eligibility extends to British citizens, Commonwealth citizens, and foreign nationals who have a connection to the United Kingdom.
